Articles published in McKnight's Long-Term Care News and McKnight's Senior Living draw upon the insights of George Reeves and Marilyn Higdon as they discuss a case involving a worker's discrimination claim against a nursing home in Pennsylvania. Marilyn and George believe the case provides a cautionary tale for employers about the impact that comments about employees' health and medical conditions may have in disability discrimination claims. In their discussion of the case, they provide 3 key takeaways for employers focused on training managers and HR professionals on ADA guidelines, understanding the impact of comments cornering an employee's health, and being mindful of employee privacy and boundaries.
