In an interview with Law360, Jenna Rubin discusses why she joined Fisher Phillips in Atlanta. As a litigator and counselor for clients in the Education industry, she explains that she found it appealing to work with Jennifer Sandberg and has been watching the firm for years.

"In Atlanta, you can't ask about employment compliance and advice without hearing Jennifer Sandberg's name – she is such a powerhouse attorney, and I really wanted to learn from the best," Jenna explains. "The fact that Fisher Phillips has a strong compliance and advice practice coupled with a national education team made the firm such a great fit for me and my background."

Jenna also discusses her time as an educator for Teach for America where she was able to gain firsthand knowledge and to better assist her clients with compliance and best practices.

At Fisher Phillips, Jenna will represent clients on a variety of employment matters, including developing and managing policies and procedures on compliance issues regarding parental leave, anti-discrimination, and COVID-19.
