

Attorneys Provide Advice for Employers to Stay Consistent When Enforcing Anti-Discrimination Laws

News

8.18.22

In an interview with Law360, Marilyn Higdon and Courtney Leyes provide takeaways from a recent D.C. Circuit opinion that shows how an employer's inconsistent enforcement of anti-discrimination laws can lead to labor law violations. The ruling highlights the difficulties employers sometimes face when their obligations under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act compete with activities that are protected under Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

Marilyn and Courtney break down the details of the case and how similar inconsistencies of enforcement can be reduced in the workplace. They say employers should enforce EEO policies equally across the board, but also make sure that workers and managers know that policies exist and understand how they're expected to behave.

To read the article visit Law360 (subscription required).

---

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Marilyn Higdon

Associate

Email

Courtney Leyes

Partner

615.488.2902

Email

Service Focus

Labor Relations

Employment Discrimination and Harassment

Related Offices

Memphis

Nashville

Gulfport