

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette Turns to Labor Attorneys for Insight on Cannabis Labor Peace Agreements

News

12.05.22

In an article published in The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, Todd A. Lyon, co-chair of Fisher Phillips' Labor Relations practice, and Alexander A. Wheatley are quoted for their insight on the legality of labor peace agreements in the cannabis industry. Organizing efforts at a Pennsylvania cannabis store are raising questions about whether the state's licensing preferences - which open the door for unionization in exchange for labor peace at their stores - will hold up in court. They explain, "given that the state requirements impose obligations where the National Labor Relations Act does not, there is a strong argument that these laws are entirely or largely pre-empted by the NLRA."

To read the article, visit The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Please reach out to our Media team for any news inquiries.

Related People

Todd A. Lyon

Partner

503.205.8095

Email

Alexander A. Wheatley
Partner
503.205.8054
Email

Service Focus

Labor Relations

Industry Focus

Cannabis

Related Offices

Portland

San Francisco

Seattle