

Florida Employers Beware: COVID-19 Litigation May Lead To Additional Claims

Publication

6.17.20

In her article for the Daily Business Review, LaKisha Kinsey-Sallis explores how the wave of COVID-19-related litigation may also dredge up long-simmering employment conflicts unrelated to the pandemic. LaKisha showcases a recent case in Florida where an employee not only alleged improper access to PPE during the pandemic, but also brought forth claims unrelated to the current pandemic. She advises employers to follow OSHA and CDC guidelines as they reopen their workplaces, document all personnel changes and to be aware of potential litigation claims given the unprecedented landscape.

To read the full article, visit the Daily Business Review (subscription required).

Related People

LaKisha M. Kinsey-Sallis

Partner

813.769.7516

Email

Service Focus

Litigation and Trials

Related Offices

--

Fort Lauderdale
Orlando
Tampa