What's New in Mine Safety? A view from the Nation's Capital

In this episode, Arthur and Chris welcome a special guest, Paul Krivokuca, Vice President of Health and Safety at National Mining Association to discuss how policy-level developments in Washington, DC related to mine safety. The group discusses a wide range of issues, including the current state of mine safety policy, developments that may be on the horizon and how mine operators can take part in the process as new policy initiatives unfold. This lively discussion emphasizes the impact that these developments in D.C. have on the day-to-day work toward mine safety throughout the country.
