Fisher Phillips, one of the country's preeminent labor and employment law firms representing employers, is pleased to announce that Andrew Sommer has joined the firm as a partner in the Los Angeles office.

Andrew has more than 20 years of employment litigation experience with national law firms and was most recently a partner at a boutique labor and employment firm where he served as Managing Partner of its California practice. He is a first chair attorney known for defending employers in federal and state court litigation and administrative proceedings throughout California. Andrew represents companies in a wide variety of workplace disputes involving claims of discrimination, wrongful termination as well as wage and hour collective and class actions. He is also known for handling workplace safety matters and regularly represents employers in inspections, investigations, and enforcement actions involving Cal/OSHA and other state plans.

"We are thrilled to have a lawyer of Andrew's caliber joining us," said Todd Scherwin Regional Managing Partner of the firm's Los Angeles office. "Workplace safety is a matter of concern for all employers, and Andrew's track record of handling the most sensitive inspections, investigations, and enforcement actions is such a valuable component of what we can offer our clients here in California and across the rest of the country."

"I am truly excited to join a firm known for providing workplace safety counsel and advice to some of the largest and most valued companies throughout the country," said
