Remote work is increasingly the norm and a rising number of office-fatigued employees are expressing the desire to work remotely. This evolving workplace trend presents unique challenges for employers, especially when it comes to understanding and navigating the intricate web of legal and tax implications across international borders.

Our upcoming webinar offers an in-depth exploration of these challenges. Join us as we dissect the complexities of payroll logistics, immigration requirements, tax ramifications, and the implications for benefits and insurance in cross-border remote work scenarios. Fisher Phillips attorney William D. Wright will guide you through this terrain, highlighting the legal nuances and potential risks employers face when considering remote work arrangements from different countries.
