Fisher Phillips, an international labor and employment law firm representing employers, has launched a new Organizing Activity Map that draws upon publicly available data published by the National Labor Relations Board to reflect organizing filings searchable by region, state, and date. The map is another tool Fisher Phillips has created for clients and corporate counsel across the country to understand the practical implications of new and emerging workplace trends. The map is accessible for free on the firm's website.

"The workplace has changed dramatically and the new dynamic between the employer-employee relationship has ushered in an era in which employers must navigate a new set of labor relations challenges and opportunities," said Todd Lyon, co-chair of Fisher Phillips Labor Relations Practice Group. "By using technology to stay abreast of today's representation filings, our Organizing Activity Map gathers public information to offer a real-time snapshot of those developments as part of a broader effort to illustrate recent regulatory developments impacting the workplace."

Fisher Phillips' Labor Relations Practice Group includes over 100 attorneys located across the country and boasts decades of experience implementing tried and true employee-relations strategies that combine creative and proactive measures designed to address the unique issues confronting today's unionized and non-union workplaces. From developing comprehensive multi-state positive employee relations plans, to representing employers before Federal and State Labor Relations Boards, the firm's attorneys are a powerful asset to employers. So much so that U.S. News – Best Lawyers® named Fisher Phillips the 2023 "Law Firm of The Year" in Labor Law Management, an honor the firm received twice within three years.
