Workplace activism is on the rise and with it, union organizing stoppages – ranging from labor union-led strikes to spontaneous employee walkouts – are at historically high levels. Perhaps not tellingly, there is currently a 67% public approval rating of labor well above the 5-year average. The pendulum has clearly swung toward change that could fundamentally disrupt the way you do business.

Are you prepared to respond to this new labor relations reality? Labor Relations attorneys at Fisher Phillips can help. Join us for an immersive and highly interactive full-day labor boot camp training session that will boost your confidence and preparedness and provide answers to the complicated questions:

- What is the value associated with remaining union-free?
- What does – and what should – the union-free employer look like?
- What motivates employees to organize?
- What is the supervisor's role in keeping a company union-free?
