Overview

Marc Rein is an associate in the firm's New Jersey office and defends employers in various workplace-related matters. Marc's experience includes complex litigation, environmental litigation, white-collar defense, securities litigation, and investigations. He regularly contributes to publications on significant legal topics, such as the DOJ's voluntary self-disclosure policy and the SEC's amendments to Rule 10b5-1.

Before joining Fisher Phillips, Marc was an associate at a New Jersey-based law firm where he worked on all aspects of litigation matters from inception to trial.

Marc's experience extends beyond law, having previously run his own company producing multimedia content for clients such as Seton Hall University and the Sabin Vaccine Institute. This background has equipped him with unique skills in managing projects and coordinating with clients.
