

California Minimum Wage Will Increase to $16.90 For All Businesses on January 1, 2026: What Employers Should Do Now

Insights 8.06.25

California officials just announced that the statewide minimum wage will increase for all employers to $16.90 on January 1, 2026, as required by the state's annual inflation-based adjustment process. The Department of Finance certified the applicable Consumer Price Index (CPI) increase with Friday's announcement, triggering an impending rise in the statewide minimum wage for all businesses, regardless of size. What are the five things you need to know and what should you do in response to this announcement?

Why This Matters

In addition to affecting hourly pay, the change impacts exempt employee classifications, wage-related premiums, sick leave accruals, and even wage statement compliance. Employers should also note that this increase operates alongside numerous local minimum wage ordinances and industry-specific rules that may impose higher or different standards.

Five Things Employers Need to Know

- 2. Exempt employee salary thresholds will increase, as they are tied to the minimum wage. You must ensure exempt workers still meet the new salary basis test. For most exempt employees, the minimum salary will be $70,304 per year or $5,858.67 per month.
- 3. Inside sales exemptions, tool reimbursements, and certain piece-rate compensation arrangements may need recalibration based on the new wage.

- 4. Premium pay calculations for split shifts, reporting time, and meal/rest period violations must reflect the new hourly baseline.
- 5. Local ordinances may still impose higher minimum wage rates. Employers with operations in cities like San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Berkeley should confirm whether local increases surpass the state rate. Check here to confirm.

Action Items for Employers

- Audit employee compensation to ensure compliance with new minimum wage and exemption thresholds.
- Update payroll systems to reflect the new rate for both hourly and salaried workers.
- Revise policies and workplace postings to ensure they align with the updated wage requirements.
- Train HR and payroll personnel on the impact of the wage hike on overtime eligibility, premiums, and paystub accuracy.
- Monitor additional developments at the local and industry level.
