Overview

An associate in Fisher Phillips' Atlanta office, Henry Fink represents businesses in various labor and employment matters with an emphasis on restrictive covenant and trade secret disputes. He defends clients in employment discrimination and labor relations matters and advises employers on how to protect proprietary information, mitigate risk, and effectively enforce non-compete and non-solicitation agreements.

An Atlanta native, Henry brings both litigation experience and practical business insight to his work. He is dedicated to understanding each client's operations and industry so that he can provide tailored, business-minded solutions. Whether guiding a client through a complex dispute or proactively addressing workplace challenges, Henry prioritizes clear communication, strategic advice, and strong client relationships.

Before joining Fisher Phillips, Henry was an associate at an Atlanta-based law firm focused on labor, employment, and complex litigation where he handled numerous workplace-related matters involving trade secret litigation, labor relations, and discrimination.
