Vet your AI bias auditors. Speaking of AI development you increasingly use artificial intelligence tools to help you make your decisions, you'll likely retain vendors to conduct bias audits. But here's the challenge: not every "bias auditor" is equally qualified. Click here for key questions you should ask when evaluating AI bias auditors to avoid wasted effort on an audit that won't withstand scrutiny.

Prepare for possible public release of EEO-1 data. A recent decision that could significantly reshape how EEO-1 reports for federal contractors are handled by the federal government, a federal appeals court recently ruled that certain employer EEO-1 reports must be disclosed in response to a FOIA request. Click here to learn what you should do as a result.

Continue to monitor DEI and EEO compliance. Federal officials recently issued another warning that employers could be at risk of losing federal funding if their DEI or similar programs violate anti-discrimination laws. Click here for our workplace compliance roadmap.

Review labor relations developments. The Fifth Circuit recently blocked the NLRB from prosecuting unfair labor practice complaints as courts debate the agency's constitutional power. Additionally, the NLRB's Acting General Counsel recently issued two policy memos reshaping how you can handle union-related risks in salting and decertification cases.

Celebrate another key privacy win in California. Web operators secured another win in the protracted battle over third-party website cookies on August 1 when a California state court held that these common tech features were not "trap and trace" devices and therefore a business does not violate CIPA for having them. Click here for three important steps your business can take to avoid or defend against these lawsuits.
