OVERVIEW

Aleksandra Kostoreva defends employers in a wide range of employment litigation matters across California, with a focus on claims involving harassment, discrimination, retaliation, wrongful termination, and wage and hour disputes under state and federal law. Drawing on hands-on experience managing cases from inception through resolution – and experience in-house at a Russian office of one of the largest media holdings and at a major Russian industrial and engineering company, -- Aleksandra represents businesses and organizations in both single-plaintiff actions and multi-party disputes in state and federal court. She guides clients through all phases of litigation—including pleadings, discovery, motion practice, and trial preparation—and serves as a trusted advisor on risk assessment and litigation strategy.

With a strong foundation in employment litigation, Aleksandra handles complex disputes involving dispositive motions, depositions, discovery, and document production. She regularly appears in court on behalf of employers, preparing cases for trial and settlement while delivering clear, actionable counsel at every stage. Aleksandra's pragmatic approach and commitment to thorough case management enable her to efficiently resolve matters ranging from routine employment claims to high-stakes disputes.

Before joining Fisher Phillips, Aleksandra was an associate at a regional litigation firm, where she represented clients in employment matters and general litigation, handled law and motion practice, and managed all phases of discovery and depositions.
