OVERVIEW

Taylor Tejada defends employers and businesses in California in complex labor and employment litigation, including single-plaintiff claims, class actions, and PAGA representative actions. He also advises clients on compliance with California labor laws and counsels on performance management, termination, wage and hour audits, leave policies, and employment contracts. Taylor's practice encompasses drafting motions, mediating high-stakes disputes, and negotiating settlements that have secured favorable outcomes totaling millions of dollars for his clients.

With broad trial and litigation experience, Taylor manages all phases of wage and hour and employment claims, representing a diverse range of employers from biotechnology firms to technology and medical device companies. He has served as second-chair trial counsel in multiple successful trials and handles discovery, deposition preparation, and complex motions practice. Taylor also reviews collective bargaining agreements and supports union-related disputes, providing strategic counsel in both state and federal courts.

Before joining Fisher Phillips, Taylor was a labor and employment associate at a prominent San Francisco firm, where he led wage and hour class action matters and represented employers in high-stakes litigation and mediation.
