California employers don't just face litigation risks; they face some of the most complex, high-stakes employment battles in the country. In 2026, the landscape is more challenging than ever. From landmark court decisions to emerging legal trends reshaping the workplace, the risks are real, the costs are high, and the margin for error is thin. That's why Fisher Phillips is bringing together a team of its most experienced employment attorneys for the 2026 California Litigation Conference, an event designed for the decision-makers who are in the room when it counts.

Designed specifically for in-house counsel, senior managers, and directors, this conference delivers the strategies, tools, and insider knowledge needed to navigate today's litigation environment with confidence, whether you're managing active disputes, preparing for potential legal challenges, or simply trying to stay ahead of the curve. Attendees will gain insights on the latest developments and emerging trends in California employment litigation, proven strategies for managing and defending claims before they spiral into business-threatening crises, and practical guidance for building a stronger working relationship with outside counsel. The conference is led by Fisher Phillips' California Litigation practice group attorneys who have been
