The publication Corporate Compliance Insights (which focuses upon matters of interest regarding compliance, governance, and risk in the business community) recently published an article we authored regarding the federal Fair Labor Standards Act's requirement that covered employers provide breaktime to a worker for the purpose of expressing breast milk for her nursing child.

The item summarizes the break requirements, raises some planning considerations, gives examples of unanswered questions, and highlights selected enforcement developments. The piece is entitled, "Are You Ready To Accommodate Nursing Mothers?", and it can be accessed at this link.
