OVERVIEW

Andrew Dymowski defends employers in labor and employment litigation, guiding businesses of all sizes through claims involving discrimination, retaliation, wage and hour violations, wrongful termination, and class action disputes in both state and federal courts. Drawing on his experience drafting and arguing dispositive motions, preparing and conducting depositions, and managing complex matters from inception through trial preparation, Andrew delivers business-focused solutions that help clients minimize risk and navigate the evolving requirements of the FLSA, Title VII, ADA, ADEA, and related state and federal statutes.

Before joining Fisher Phillips, Andrew served as an associate at a national full-service law firm, where he handled a wide variety of labor and employment matters for corporate clients. His earlier experience includes clerking for a trial judge, providing him with valuable insights into case strategy and judicial decision-making that inform his practical, client-centered approach.
