ENTERTAINMENT

Entertainment companies can't afford workforce issues that delay productions, disrupt talent relationships, undermine transactions, or become public distractions.

Fisher Phillips works with clients to anticipate and manage these risks so they can keep creating, producing, performing, and growing. We understand the business realities behind the art—from fast-moving productions and project-based workforces to complex union relationships, emerging technologies, and heightened reputational stakes.

Our attorneys advise media and content producers, live entertainment and events companies, music businesses, gaming and technology companies, talent representatives, and other organizations across the entertainment economy.

Challenges We Help You Address

Workforce Strategy and Labor Relations. We advise clients to build and manage flexible workforces, address union and organizing issues, and navigate labor obligations without losing operational momentum.

Compliance and Dispute Management. We counsel clients to address worker classification, wage and hour, workplace culture, privacy, and other employment risks before they disrupt operations or become costly disputes.

Talent, Executive, and Business Protections. We help structure key relationships and protect confidential information, creative assets, trade secrets, and key personnel.

Investigations, Crisis, and Reputation. We respond quickly and discreetly when workplace allegations, leadership issues, or other sensitive matters threaten people, operations, or brand reputation.

Transactions, Benefits, and Global Growth. We address workforce liabilities, benefit obligations, immigration and global mobility, technology risks, and integration challenges to protect business value during periods of growth and change.

Workplace Safety and Operational Readiness. We advise on preparing for and responding to safety risks across sets, venues, tours, productions, and other live or project-based environments.

The entertainment industry moves quickly. Fisher Phillips provides clear, business focused counsel to protect people, preserve reputations, and keep the organizations moving forward.
