In an International Employment Lawyer article, Roxanna Sarkar-Patel commented on UK whistleblowing laws and how they apply in Britain's entertainment industry. She explains that the current whistleblowing framework does not address the reality of retaliation, which often results in whistleblowers not being rehired in the creative industries. Thus, Roxanna encourages employers to design reporting processes around that reality, which means establishing "... reporting routes outside the production hierarchy, which stay open after a contract ends, and monitoring whether people who raise concerns continue to be booked."
