Part III: Protecting Your Confidential Information, Relationships and
Talent: Non-Compete Agreements, Trade Secrets and Computer
Protection Laws

Presented by Michael Elkon, Fisher Phillips on February 19

In a world where employees can take valuable trade secrets on a flash drive that fits on a key chain or using an email that can be the proverbial needle in a haystack of a Sent folder, companies have to focus on protecting their trade secrets on the front end. Additionally, in an economy where relationships and information take precedence, it is critical for a company to both retain its employees entrusted with those assets and also effectively recruit talent from competitors in a legally sound manner. This presentation examined the legal landscape for companies protecting their information and relationships and also hiring key personnel, with a special focus on non-compete agreements, trade secret protection, and computer abuse statutes.
