Questions and Networking

Accommodating extended leave requests and implementing disability accommodations can be burdensome for employers. However, the law does have its limits. This program will discuss the various disability-related laws and regulations as well as provide guidance on when the company has satisfied its duties. Attendees will learn:

1. The most common problems employers and managers face:

2. How to effectively navigate the interactive process;
3. How to determine when an employee's leave becomes an undue hardship; and
4. When an employer may safely end the interactive process or consider terminating disabled employees.

Space is limited and attendance will be awarded on a first-come, first-served basis. Parking is validated.

These programs have been submitted to the HR Certification Institute for review.
