Barbarians at the Gate: What Every California Business Owner and Executive Should Know About Joint Employer Liability and Asset Protection

Affiliated business entities may under certain circumstances be considered joint or co-employers for the purpose of employment and wage and hour liability. And in some cases, courts may hold owners, officers and managers personally liable for employment violations of their business. What can you do as a business owner and manager to avoid the pitfalls of joint employer liability and personal liability? Join us for a roundtable discussion of various strategies, ranging from employment practices and procedures to asset protection and utilizing appropriate business structures and formalities.
