The late 80s and 90s were the beginning of employers' battles with unlawful drugs and the creation of a host of new regulations by the DOT and numerous states. For the next 16 odd years, workplace unlawful drug use declined and drug testing and drug and alcohol policies became routine and not of much concern.

Starting in 2014 and 2015, trends reversed and positive test results began to increase, and to the horror of those who lived through the 60s, opiate abuse has surged by double digits.

In this session, we'll discuss drug abuse trends, including abuse of prescription pain killers, issues posed by state legalization of medical and recreational marijuana use, how to respond to lawful but potentially hazardous drug use in the workplace, and the new OSHA regulations.
