

Insights, News & Events

WHAT EXECUTIVES MUST KNOW ABOUT SAFETY AND OSHA, AND “THE CARE AND FEEDING OF SAFETY PROFESSIONALS.”

Webinar

Event

Oct 2, 2018

2:00 PM - 3:15 PM EST

GoToWebinar

No major MBA program includes meaningful workplace safety and health instruction in their curriculums, and yet safety-related issues can cause headaches for executives and damage company value. Look at the UAW's effective use of safety complaints to give Tesla's Fremont assembly plant a black eye with the public and creditors. In some industries, a single OSHA serious citation or a company's injury and illness rate can complicate bidding or throw a wrench into a prospective purchaser's due diligence. Top management must be involved in safety compliance or as in any crucial business area, the right things won't happen. Moreover, a savvy executive can attack the artificial separation between the safety function and production. Properly used safety can contribute to efficiency, quality, a union free culture, and sustainability/social awareness goals. And no executive ever wants to attend a funeral for an employee.

This practical webinar will provide a birds-eye view of the safety requirements and legal issues and discuss effective ways to improve safety efforts and motivate personnel.

<< Click here to View the Recording >>

Related People

Howard A. Mavity

Partner

404.240.4204

Service Focus

Workplace Safety

For questions please contact Tori Spencer
at tspencer@fisherphillips.com