Whether it be technological advancements and/or flexible work arrangements, employers' potential exposure has drastically increased in regards to off-the-clock work performed by non-exempt employees as well as potential safety issues. Moreover, with such technical advancements, permitting employer's data to be stored and transmitted using devices and networks outside the employer's control creates a security risk to the information that may expose companies to liability. This presentation will cover California best practices regarding cell phones, laptops, and remote or flexible work arrangements.
