Every business around the world is constantly looking for a program or innovation that will give them an edge or advantage over their competition. ISO 45001, the new international occupational health and safety (OHS) management standard provides this once-in-a-generation advantage that cutting edge businesses will quickly utilize. ISO 45001 has been developed to improve safety and health performance, identify and reduce workplace risks, enhance sustainability and create safer working conditions. This course, taught by highly experienced, internationally recognized safety and health consultants, attorneys, and architects of the ISO 45001 standard will provide a real-world framework to understand each element of the new standard, as well as insight into how to implement the elements into your workplace for improved employee productivity and quality.
