No one can predict when and where another shooting will happen, but with education and training, organizations can take steps to reduce the risk of a shooting happening to them.

Join OSHA and Workplace Safety professionals Orvel Ronk, Travis Vance, Kathleen Zicari and Steve Melton for an informative session that will highlight why it is important for businesses to have an active shooter program.

- What does active shooter training involve?
- How can an employer mitigate millions of dollars in recovery costs?
- What are the benefits to having a complete security and active shooter mitigation, response, and recovery program?
