While the Covid-19 pandemic has been a severe challenge for the nation and the world, it has given the Trump administration an opening to push its immigration agenda farther than what might have otherwise been possible. In this presentation Jeff Winchester and Edwina Kye of our Seattle office discuss how the pandemic and the administration's policies have affected employer compliance with Form I-9 requirements, employees working on non-immigrant visas, international travel, and even the green card process. Our presenters will predict how these issues will play out post-Covid-19, and how employers can be prepared for what's next.

The coronavirus pandemic forced many companies to execute employment decisions quickly out of necessity, amidst newly evolving administrative guidance and laws. With many workers anxious about returning to work and unemployment at record levels, businesses must act more deliberately when applying this still ever-evolving framework to address employee concerns. New legal risks arise as employees return to work. These challenges have created a perfect storm for administrative agencies to test new avenues for regulatory enforcement and plaintiffs' attorneys to try new theories to challenge businesses' decisions during and after the crisis. Employee claims have already begun. Scott Prange and Nate Bailey of our Seattle office will survey new legal claims and administrative challenges and provide examples of legal theories, with the goal of arriving at practical risk mitigation solutions as we head into the "new normal."

The New "Reasonable" Test for Accommodations Post-COVID19

September 11, 2020, 12:00 - 1:00 PDT

Location: GoToWebinar - <https://attendee.gotowebinar.com/register/6413412148953900047>

Even after employees return to work and business operations return to normal, the impact of COVID-19 has changed the workplace for the foreseeable future. And until a vaccine and tests become widely available, the threat of another outbreak and employee concerns or fears regarding COVID-19 will continue to permeate throughout the workplace. As a result, employers should be prepared for new accommodations and requests related to employee disabilities and telecommuting, and be able to navigate new ADA guidelines, state guidelines, and even proclamations from Washington's governor. Together, Margaret Burnham and Ryan R. Jones from our Seattle office will discuss how to define what is "reasonable" and how to engage with employees in the interactive process in the new normal following the COVID-19 pandemic.

All webinars are pending 1-hour WA-CLE and HRCI/SHRM.
