Fisher Phillips ranked in the Top 10 law firms nationally in separate surveys covering federal employment litigation, federal discrimination lawsuits, and federal wage-hour litigation. Additionally, the firm was ranked in the Top Five for growth in handling discrimination suits and in the Top Five for growth in handling ERISA litigation.

The surveys were conducted by Law360, a newswire for legal professionals in the employment industry that covers developing stories in litigation, law, and regulation. The survey reviewed the legal work of the 300 largest law firms in the United States.

The survey report includes this information from Fisher Phillips Chairman Roger K. Quillen: While the firm has had success litigating cases at the trial court and appellate court levels, the firm pursues the solution that best suits the client, rather than always pursuing the most aggressive and expensive litigation strategy.
