Fisher Phillips announced today that Craig Annunziata has been appointed as the new managing partner of the firm's Chicago office. Annunziata has practiced labor and employment law for 15 years and has been with Fisher Phillips since 2004. His practice is focused on representing management in employment-related disputes, and he has defended employers before federal and state courts and alternative dispute forums throughout the United States. He also defends management against charges filed with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and related state agencies.

Before joining Fisher Phillips, Annunziata was a partner with the law firm of Baker & McKenzie. Following law school, he served a clerkship for the Honorable William J. Castagna, U.S. District Judge for the Middle District of Florida.

Annunziata earned his law degree from the John Marshall Law School in Chicago, an MBA from Loyola University, and a Bachelors of Science degree from DePaul University.

Fisher Phillips Chairman Roger Quillen said, Craig has proven his leadership abilities over the years developing new clients, providing those clients with exceptional legal counsel, and mentoring young attorneys when they join the firm. Under Craig's leadership we expect the Chicago office to continue to grow and provide high-quality service to our clients.
